

Council meeting tonight

The 1967 version of the Students' Council, elected last November 130 at the height of the Daily controversy, meets for the first time tonight at eight in the Union Board Room.

Highlight of the meeting will be the presence of the seven-man executive of l'Union Générale des Etudiants du Québec, led by president Robert Nelson. The executive will address the Council for 30 minutes and then answer questions for another 30 minutes, before Council begins its regular business.

The 1966-67 ASUS Course Guide's request for a $5000 subsidy is tentatively on the agenda, pending the approval of the ASUS executive this afternoon.

A proposed seminar on French Canada, the assignment of portfolios, budgets and constitutions will also be discussed.

Resignations withdrawn; Quartier Latin to carry on

by SANDRA SCHECTER

The staff of the Quartier Latin, under the editorship of Nicole Fortin, have withdrawn their resignations and intend to put out a paper on Wednesday.

The staff retracted their resignations despite restricting measures by the AGEUM executive and threats by the administration to withhold finances.

The executive of AGEUM has been at odds with the Quartier Latin over editorial policy. It is "extremely pleased" with the new development, as it eliminates the threat of an unprecedented withdrawal of the Faculty of Social Sciences from AGEUM.

Seats vacated

At the Friday Student Council meeting, Mario Demais, president of the Social Sciences Faculty, and four other representatives of the faculty, vacated their seats on the Council, in opposition to Council control action. Demais had called a referendum to ratify this position on behalf of his faculty for this coming Friday. Since Mlle Fortin has re-assumed the editorship of the Quartier Latin, the referendum, a source of much embarrassment to the Council, will most likely be cancelled.

Conspiracy

In an interview, Mlle Fortin charged the Students' Council with being engaged in a "conspiracy with the administration" against the Quartier Latin. She said that the administration "accused our paper of being incomplete and non-objective", but they refused to offer proof of their allegations.

Despite the threat by the administration to withhold its financial instalment from the Quartier Latin, Mlle Fortin is confident that the paper will have sufficient funds. She said, "Nobody asked for our resignation — the council did not demand it; neither did the administration. The students definitely support us. Therefore, there is no excuse to withhold our funds."

Propaganda paper

Commenting on the council's decision to create a new paper, Edition Syndicale, Mlle Fortin said, "Naturally, they say that it will be very objective, but it will be a propaganda paper to serve their purposes."

Assistant Editor Louis Falardeau emphasized his intention to fight for the autonomy of the paper. "We withdrew our resignations so that we may resume our battle against executive domination," he said.

Falardeau was reminded that the motion to create a new newspaper is still not legal — the administration must give its approval.

Council dissatisfied

Michel Charbonneau, administrative vice-president of AGEUM, re-asserted the dissatisfaction with Quartier Latin's news-coverage technique. Asked exactly what the administration objected to, Charbonneau said, "I cannot answer."

With regard to the Quartier Latin staff's decision to return to work, Charbonneau said, "Personally, I am very satisfied that they have gone back."

At present, the Quartier Latin staff finds itself in a delicate position. It must publish a paper under the terms dictated by Council, while still opposing Council action.

UGEQ to hold demonstration protesting government silence

L'Union Générale des étudiants du Québec will hold a demonstration this Thursday in an attempt to force the government to make a statement on the Preliminary Report on Education. The government has taken no stand on the Report which was issued in late December and recommends basic changes in the province's educational system.

In an attempt to get a policy statement from the government, Robert Nelson, president of UGEQ wrote to Education Minister Jean Jacques Bertrand requesting an interview. He did not receive a reply. UGEQ then picketed the National Union Club, hoping to force a response from the government, but none was forthcoming.

At a meeting last night, the delegates from the universities, colleges and technical schools which UGEQ represents decided to stage another protest in a further effort to obtain an interview, and thus a statement from the government.

500 students are expected to participate in the demonstration which will take place in front of the Club Renaissance at Sherbrooke and Berri from 4:30 to 5:30. Although McGill is not a member of UGEQ, a spokesman for the Union said that McGill students are welcome to take part in the protest.

Executive and finance problems plague ASUS Course Guide

The Arts and Science Course Guide, beleaguered by lack of staff and student support and under fire from the ASUS executive, may be scrapped for this year.

Editor John Fekete resigned yesterday, along with Simon Taunton, the result of a move by the executive to cut their salaries. This was the culmination of a series of motions that had seen applications for editor re-opened and a committee appointed to study the management of last year's Guide, of which Taunton had been editor and Fekete executive editor.

The executive refused to accept Fekete's resignation.

Fekete's salary was reduced to $1.70 an hour from $2 and Taunton's to $1.35 from $1.70. Both figures are based on 18 fifty-hour weeks during the summer. Fekete's budget included a total of $6000 for salaries, including those of writers and secretarial staff.

Applications for editor were re-opened because the original advertisement had not mentioned that the editorship was a salaried position. The appointment of the committee was the result of the contention by first-year class representative Paul Wong and fourth-year representative Jim Armstrong that no complete report on the finances of the Guide had ever been submitted. As a result, they said, certain questions about the way the funds were handled remained unanswered and the executive had no criteria on which to judge estimates for this year's Guide.

Taunton was supposed to go to the Students' Council tonight to ask for $5000 toward the publishing of the 1966-67 Guide. The rest of the book's $18,000 budget was expected to come from sales revenue and ASUS support. The future of this budget and other issues surrounding the Guide will come up at another ASUS executive meeting today at 1 pm.

"I did not resign simply because my salary was cut," Fekete said yesterday. "I might have been willing to consider the reduction in my own salary, but the corresponding reductions in the salaries of my staff would have made it impossible to do a proper job."

He added that the "negative attitude" of the ASUS executive and "apathy" on the part of the students made his position as editor extremely difficult.

In answer to a front-page story in the Daily yesterday calling for volunteers, only 25 had signed at the SC office by the end of the afternoon. At least 200 student workers are needed.

Fekete said he was "completely opposed" to the re-opening of applications, with the new editor not to be appointed until February 1, less than three weeks before questionnaires are to be distributed, because "if the ASUS made a mistake in not mentioning that it was a salaried position, it is too late to correct it now, in this manner."

Taunton said that "we intend to go on as if nothing had happened, because we feel the project is too important to be cancelled."

At the moment, Fekete and Taunton are continuing in their positions until the matter is cleared up. However, with questionnaires scheduled to be sent to classes in about five weeks, chances of putting out the Guide appear small unless it is settled quickly.

UGEQ fighting to freeze fares

"UGEQ is pressuring to freeze fares and is even negotiating the formation of a common front with other student organizations on the subject," said UGEQ External Vice-President Pierre Lefrançois in an interview about the impending increase in bus and Metro fares.

Adult tickets will be raised from 5 for 90¢ to 4 for $1, while "students" tickets (for those under 18 years of age) are to go up from 6 for 50¢ to 9 for $1. But, it is possible that because of strong opposition from the Executive Committee of the city of Montreal, student fares will remain the same.

Lefrançois called the price hike "unjustified," and pointed out that many students are over 18.

Considering students are commuters, UGEQ must, according to Lefrançois, unite with other commuters against the rise in fares.

Labor omnia vincit

Development of the concept of student as citizen is no more a part of the private property of the activists about us than such time-honored phrases as participatory democracy or equality before the law.

The current executive of the Students' Society, who have certainly sought out the moderate in all things, have themselves picked up the banner for commitment beyond the campus. The case in point is President McCoubrey's decision to act as go-between for a group who want to help out during the Catholic school strike.

Here indeed is activism with a new flavor. Taking the cue from long standing credos of the commuter mentality, the President and the committed fifteen no doubt see their overtures as the student equivalent of the Mothers' March or the Benificent Order of Moose.

But whether or not they know it, such piece-meal social involvement only assures the continuation of the status quo.

Concern is legitimate for laid-off students who may seek other ways of spending their time, now that the classroom game has been called to a halt. But such quitters are only a flash in the pan compared to the annual quota of drop-outs who fail to respond to poor and disinterested teaching. Sooner or later people are going to have to pay the price if they want better secondary education.

Furthermore, the prolonged prospect of a bunch of greenhorns handing out essay topics, while the teachers make their demands, would probably drive a lot more students to the shop.

What we have is the role of the student as scab, and what it means is that the Catholic School Board can stave off union demands with the knowledge that the students are being fed something, anything, from the tree of knowledge in the interim. This is not to suggest that BA4s could continue the chore of schoolmastering for an extended period. They couldn't and they wouldn't. What it does mean is that the shock value of the thought of "no school today" would be lost or more probably only delayed.

Stop-gap measures are not going to speed a viable solution.

If the Students' Society is going to make a token gesture, let it be in full support of the teachers' stand. Provincial teaching standards are low, low, low. A key reason for this is a lack of teaching incentive. If only a strike can solve this situation we must support the strike.

Part of the blame for McGill's stone age freshman program can justifiably be directed at Quebec's poor secondary schooling. In this context we have a real stake in the betterment of the teachers' situation.

At the moment the Catholic School Board doesn't seem to want to take Mr. McCoubrey up on his offer. That's probably a good thing. After all, it would have seemed a bit strange for an organization which has done next to nothing about its own injustices vis à vis the Province, to go all out in a misguided effort for others.

Get That Big OK

Dear Sir,

I think it's high time someone forced the Quebec government to get its thumb out of its bum and face reality as it really is, though I doubt Daniel Johnson has the mentality to do so. We're being starved financially. This university will be the proverbial wasteland in a decade unless the students act, and act immediately. This campus has an incredible affinity for petitions, yet not one has been passed around protesting the government's amazing handling of grants to this university. We are content to squabble about anything that is on a high philosophical plane, but when something as tangible as grants comes up, silence. Why haven't we had one motion in Council passed concerning an en masse march on Quebec? There's not going to be any council unless something is done quickly about more finances to this university. Where are the student leaders? Are they too naive to realize the present danger that faces McGill? Where is the SDU to carry the torch? Let us show the government and our society that we are not content with our situation and that we are ready to do something about it. After reading this letter, people will say to themselves how right he is, whereupon they will proceed in typical McGill fashion to do not a goddam thing!

Oh Canada Cha Cha Cha

Dear Sir,

It is very surprising that so few students have expressed opinions on our Centennial, considering the volume of great utterances over the past year, and your readers' propensity for irascible hue and cry. Perhaps we are all happy with Canada and the Canadian way.

Centennial statements, so far, have tended to be rich in self-congratulations and good public relations, and lean on hard appraisal. In a struggle to find the Canadian identity, politicians, speech-makers, and program directors have made a not-too-difficult discovery. We are a truly remarkable people; well justified in being so proud of ourselves, and in ignoring the rest of humanity. How nice it is to know that 2/5 of the world starves, or is decimated by smallpox, because of their own personal failings, and not because of any shortcomings of the system. The rest of the world should be ecstatically happy because we have the second highest standard of living in the world. A warning! Canadians should know the score before blowing their own trumpet.

Donald Haigh, BSc 4

McCoubrie Slip

Dear Sir,

Regarding the attempt of Mr. McCoubrey and his fifteen (!?) friends to aid the students affected by the strike of the Montreal Catholic School Commission teachers: this foray into "social involvement" is a reversal of Mr. McCoubrey's former stand against the entry of university students into community affairs.

His sympathy for the students is touching; however, had he thought more rationally about the matter, he should have realized that support for the teachers would be a more responsible attitude. To raise the level of education in Quebec, the teachers must be decently paid. The Catholic School Commission, like Administration everywhere, refuses to endanger its close association with the Establishment, thereby creating a crisis wherein the students, for whom it professes so much concern, must suffer.

Surely Mr. Aberman, if not otherwise occupied, would have been so kind as to point out this salient fact to Mr. McCoubrey.

Point Of Clarification

Dear Sir,

With reference to the editorial in yesterday's Daily concerning the needs for campus political parties, I would like to clarify one point: Students for a Democratic University is not a political party. We have not considered contesting an election nor are we prepared at the present to endorse any particular candidates.

The essential thing with SDU is that we are concerned with more than just "student government" in its restricted sense. We believe in the existence of a university community... a community which does not encourage the false and limiting distinctions between "students", "faculty", and "administration". Learning is more than a one-way street, something present university structures do not seem to recognize.

SDU is concerned with the democratization of this university community, both internally and with respect to the rest of society. Membership in our organization is not restricted to students alone.

Reference was also made to the "comprehensive and long range program" which supposedly has been formulated by Students for a Democratic University. In fact, all policies and programs of SDU will originate in the discussion Sections which form the base for our organization. The entire membership of SDU has been divided into these Sections (10-to-15 persons in each) and as they will be meeting for the first time during this week, no "long-range program" could really be in existence.

You note quite accurately, however, that the formal decision making structure of the Students' Society is inadequate for the present needs and interests of its members. Poor communication, and lack of political responsibility result in inconsistency and domination by an élite, an oligarchy. The answer to these serious problems can possibly be found in political parties, or perhaps in the establishment of a competing newspaper on campus.

Students do have a collective role to play, both in the university community and in society. If we feel it will take a political party to help realize this role, then no doubt Students for a Democratic University will reconsider its own approach and objectives.

Victor Rabinovitch,
Chairman (Pro-tem)
Students for a Democratic University.

Chessmen tie U of T

The Eastern Canadian Collegiate Chess Tournament, held this year at the University of Toronto, ended in a tie between McGill and the U of T.

McGill and the U of T each finished with 39 points, although in their match, McGill defeated Toronto 4½ to 3½. Their closest competitor was McMaster, which finished the tournament with 24½ points.

Sherbrooke plays host to next UGEQ congress

UGEQ's policy on education and the structural changes within the union at all levels will be the themes of the next UGEQ congress to be held from February 15 to 19, at University of Sherbrooke.

According to External Vice-President Pierre Lefrançois, four commissions will be set up dealing with all aspects of UGEQ. The first will be concerned with the social involvement of students at the national level, at the international level, in social action, and in relation to other organizations.

Education will be the topic of the second commission, while the third will deal with the services of UGEQ.

The fourth will examine the internal structure of UGEQ, from both the administrative and structural aspects.

The commissions will meet for three days under the general leadership of Guy Beaugrand-Champagne, who will be assisted by thirty students trained by UGEQ.

Beaugrand-Champagne said the discussions will take place in three stages.

"The delegates representing the local students' societies and Federations should first make sure of the feasibility of carrying out the duties allocated in the reports delivered recently by the leaders," he said.

Majorettes

Majorette tryouts will be held starting Thursday, at 5 pm in the RVC Gymnasium. All girls interested are invited to come. No previous experience is necessary.

Panel views pill's effect

by RITA SHERMAN

Oral contraceptives impose a new freedom and an equally great responsibility on the individual, concluded a panel discussion yesterday about "The Pill".

The three participants in the discussion were Professor Joan Marsden of the Zoology Department, Father John MacNamara and Professor Byron Boville, a meteorologist.

After dismissing the medical problems of the pill as of less concern than the "human" aspects, Father MacNamara presented his view of the problem. On the one hand, the married couple who already have a few children and are worried about providing the required attention, education and living space for additional children are faced with the prospect of using the pill; on the other hand, however, are the possible effects of "contraceptive love" on the people concerned, and the relationship between them and society as a whole.

He felt that, with the introduction of the pill in society men's attitude toward women would change, and "men might look on women as playthings."

Professor Marsden felt that the pill would easily destroy monogamy and that it would encourage promiscuity.

Professor Boville objected to what he felt were "very irrelevant blacks and whites" about sex within marriage as good, and outside marriage as bad.

Redmen go for fourth win; meet Rouge et Or tonight

The rampaging Redmen will be out to extend their current unbeaten streak to four games tonight when sixth-place Laval University comes upstream for an 8 pm face-off date, at the Winter Stadium.

A win tonight would give the Redshirts sole possession of third place, one point behind Western Mustangs, and three behind the league leading Toronto Blues. However, the Mustangs, who dropped a 5-4 decision here last Friday, will still have played one more game than the Redmen, and could find themselves passed by Dave Copp's skaters if the Redmen can manage a productive weekend against Toronto and Queen's.

Terry Harron will remain sidelined with a mouthful of loosened teeth, thereby preserving the same lineup which was used against the Purple Herd. This means that Roger Helal will again play on left wing and Bert Halliwell will work as a center. Both Helal and Halliwell turned in strong performances at these relatively foreign positions and will see plenty of action against the Red and Gold.

Laval has amassed a 2-4-1 record, which puts them just two points behind the Redmen. Thus, the game turns out to be an important one for both teams, another one of those "four point" contests. Three of Laval's skaters will have an extra incentive to win tonight, for they will be up against some of their old team mates. G.B. Maughan, Fred McRobie and Mike Carroll all wore the Redmen uniform before they left for Laval.

Cagers play

The Redmen hockey squad won't be the only team scrapping for a win tonight... their hoop blood brothers and Indian cousins also have games slated for this evening. Tom Mooney's basketball quintet are slated to meet the Loyola Warriors tonight at 8:30 pm, while the Jay Vee Indians will host SGWU on the same Sir Arthur Currie Gym court at 6 pm.

TOP GUNS: No, this is not three members of the Red and White Revue pretending they are hockey players... it's three Redmen hockey players pretending they're in the Red and White Revue. Rick Moore (left), Johnny "the Hawk" Taylor, and Bert Halliwell (right), three of the Redmen's top scorers, carry their act into the Winter Stadium tonight at 8 pm to compete with Laval Rouge et Or's travelling Medicine Show.

Eccles to lecture on French Régime

The Historical Society will present Professor W.J. Eccles, speaking on "The Nature and Significance of the Frontier during the French Régime", tomorrow at 8 pm, in the Leacock Council room on the 8th floor.
